DETAILED ACTION

Claim Objections

1. Claim 1 is objected to because of the following informalities: in line 8 of the claim, "indicating" should presumably be --indication--. Appropriate correction is required.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claims 1-43 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kenney. Kenney discloses a method in a data processing system for automatically initiating the replenishment of a consumable product comprising: receiving an order for a customer and filling that order on a first date and estimating a target date for suggesting replenishment (col. 11, lines 12-34). The user is provided with an indication that the product should be replenished (see Figures 5 and 7 and col. 12, lines 50-54). The consumer then requests replenishment of the product by performing a single interaction, and the product is ordered (Fig. 10A). The target date is estimated based on the first date and the average life span of the item, which in turn is determined by the length of intervals between purchases (col. 11, lines 26-34). It is inherent that Kenney employs a computer memory and a computer-readable medium containing instructions for carrying out the method.

Kenney does not disclose the date on which the system provides the indication to the consumer. However, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to provide an indication to the consumer on or before the target date, so the consumer will not run out of the item.

The items being sold in Kenney are physical articles. However, the type of item being sold does not alter how the system functions. Thus, this descriptive material will not distinguish the claimed invention from the prior art in terms of patentability, see In re Gulack, 703 F.2d 1381, 1385, 217 USPQ 401, 404 (Fed. Cir. 1983); In re Lowry, 32 F.3d 1579, 32 USPQ2d 1031 (Fed. Cir. 1994). Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to employ the system of Kenney to sell any type of item because the type of item does not patentably distinguish the claimed invention.

Kenney does not teach the step of determining a target date based on availability of an item. However, it is common in the art to only suggest the purchase of an item if that item is in stock. It therefore would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to use the availability of the item to determine a target date so that the indication is sent only if the item is available.

Kenney does not teach the step of determining a target date based on the size of the item. However, it is commonly known in the art that the size of an item will impact the length of time it takes to consume. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to determine a target date based on the size of the item, so that a more accurate date is determined.

Kenney does not teach the step of determining a target date base on an expiration date. However, it is commonly known in the art that items need to be replaced after they expire. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to employ to determine a target date based on an expiration date so that a customer will replace expired items.

Conclusion

4. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. Mowery et al and Garg et al disclose methods for replenishing inventory.
